With a Green Paper expected from the UK Government in late 2017 or early 2018, Social care is never far from the news.

The LGA is predicting a 'perfect storm' for social care following CQC report if historic underinvestment continues into the future. Read it here . . .

Meanwhile, Sir Andrew Dilnot, author of the report which led to the Care Act 2014, speaking at the inaugural Royal London lecture on the 12th October, called for action to deal with a "broken" care market. Despite growing need from an ageing population, the number of people receiving care has barely increased since the turn of the century and consumers have very little choice of suitable care homes with vacancies in their local authority.
